A big hand goes out to the State Water Resources Control Board's (SWB) Permitting and Licensing Section as well as the California Department of Fish and Wildlife (CDFW) for their work with agricultural and fisheries advocates. Their efforts to speed up and simplify the application process for stockponds and small irrigation ponds demonstrates how constructive collaboration can make good things happen.

“Agricultural and fishery advocates will deal with less regulation because of these agencies efforts and cooperation,” said Paul Martin, Deputy Director of Permit Assistance at Go-Biz. “We would like to praise these groups on their efforts and recognize them as two of California’s Streamlining Superstars.”
